Blossoms of Hope

PINK GREENS Golf Classic

To benefit Blossoms of Hope & the
CLAUDIA MAYER CANCER RESOURCE CENTER

1,400 cherry trees are on a mission to bring beauty & hope to Howard County

In 2003 Howard County's Office of Tourism proposed a tree planting program that would beautify the county's attractions, its parks and its roadways with Kwanzan cherry trees. The project was inspired by Washington D.C.'s annual tidal basin spectacular and designed to capitalize on the blossom-mania that descends each year in the neighboring Capital. With Howard County's Kwanzan cherries blooming two weeks later than D.C.'s Sakura trees, tourism officials hoped that cherry tree enthusiasts would extend their viewing pleasure by taking a quick trip just 30 minutes just down the road to visit Howard County. The goal was 1,000 cherry trees in the ground at select locations in five years. Equally important as the beautification component of the proposal was the desire for the project to also give back to the community in a meaningful way. To that end, the trees would also be used to create awareness for breast cancer prevention each spring and raise money to benefit those within the community coping with cancer. The first tree was planted in Centennial Park in 2004. Today, over 1,400 Blossoms of Hope trees now bring beauty each spring to state and local roadways, county parks, local libraries, businesses, historic sites, public buildings, private homes, AND EVEN ONE GOLF COURSE!
